progress.” He said, adding “We must redouble our efforts to drive Government Agenda to bring the country from the yoke of poverty to prosperity. Let us make Kenya great.” He said.

Now in its 5th year, APSCA brought together executives, stakeholders, senior leaders, policymakers, in public and private sector who spearhead transformative discussions on best practices that will shape the future of public service, and position Africa’s economy for sustainable development.

The theme of the 2024 awards “Promoting Innovation for Sustainable Development” aimed to explore new ideas and techniques geared towards Sustainable Development Goals in our societies, to ensure a sustainable future for upcoming generations.

Among the achievements that were recorded in favor of the Head of Public Service was the joint initiative between Huduma Kenya and Kenya School of Government in advancement of the role of the public service in social improvement.

At the Awards Ceremony, Prof. Nura Mohamed, KSG Director General, delivered a presentation on the Customer Service Excellence program that has been jointly developed by KSG and Huduma Kenya. “The goal of the program is to transform the culture of the public service into one that is fit for service guided by a customer centric perspective.” He said.

“The program intends to build a citizen centric public service, one that is sensitive to the needs of the public, hence the collaboration between the School and Huduma Kenya to be replicated across Government and standardize service delivery.” said the DG.

Other recognitions that contributed to the Kenyan award were from Department for Audit, Legal and Regulatory Compliance, Executive Office of the President; National Research Fund; Public Service Commission; State Department for Forestry and the National Land Commission.

The ASPC Awards began in 2018 with a key role to drive thought leadership, innovation and development in the public sector. The event has been successful in convening leaders from across the continent to facilitate discussions on relatable issues with regards to the growth and sustainability. This raises the bench mark of excellence amongst public office holders and civil servants.

Mr. Akin Naphtal, one of the organizers of the awards rightly put it “This is your platform to tell the world what you have been doing. If we don’t start rewarding you, the public will not know what you are doing. They notice government when it fails, but not when it succeeds. The Africa Public Sector Conference and Awards serves to motivate leaders in government through acknowledging serving and resilience that deserves to be recognized.”

NPS Strategic Plan 2023-2027 and Customer Service Excellence Training Launch

The President of the Republic of Kenya, H.E. William Samoei Ruto, officially launched the National Police Service (NPS) and State Department of Correctional Services Strategic Plan 2023–2027 at the Kenya School of Government, Nairobi on December 13, 2024.

The Strategic Plan 2023–2027 seeks to address key challenges, including limited ICT integration in policing operations, inadequate infrastructure, and insufficient financial resources, among other pressing issues.

To strengthen capacity building within the Service, the NPS is collaborating with the Kenya School of Government (KSG) and Huduma Kenya, as directed by the Head of Public Service, Mr. Felix Koskei. This initiative focuses on advancing Customer Service Excellence.

Through the Customer Service Excellence Centre, KSG and Huduma Kenya will provide specialized training programs designed to equip NPS officers with enhanced service delivery skills.

The Director General of the Kenya School of Government (KSG), Prof. Nura Mohamed, who was in attendance, highlighted in his remarks that the five Customer Service Excellence programs launched are a direct response to His Excellency’s call for citizen -centric service delivery. He emphasized KSG's commitment to offering courses designed to enhance efficiency, effectiveness, and professionalism in service delivery.

Opening of the Regional Center of Competence

The Regional Centre of Competence that is hosted at the Kenya School of Government, Lower Kabete.

BY FAITH MUSOGA

A celebratory ceremony for the Regional Centre of Competence for Digital and AI Skilling was held on Monday, November 9, 2024 at the Kenya School of Government (KSG), Lower Kabete.

Realization of the Centre has been made possible through partnership of UNDP Kenya, Ministry of Information, Communication and the Digital Economy, and Microsoft and KSG.

Assistant Secretary-General and Regional Director of UNDP Africa Ahunna Eziakonwa who graced the ceremony said, "The Centre is about efficient service delivery across all sectors that aims to develop not just skills, but also character, courage, compassion, and capability, all anchored in dignity, integrity, and decency. This is a project that UNDP is proud to be a part of."

The formation of the Centre was indeed driven by the recognition that Africa has faced significant challenges in keeping pace with digital technology compared to other regions yet digital technology is central for change as it reshapes economies, government, and civil society impacting almost every aspect of development. There have been challenges with regards to information and capacity in ICT in Africa. It therefore emerged that there is need for systematic and coordinated investment in the digital space capacity across the continent- in institutional and human capacity.

This Centre is envisioned as a multifunctional space focused on strengthening local digital ecosystems and cultivating multi-stakeholder partnerships that will accelerate digital transformation by enhancing the culture, competencies, and capacities of Governments. It hosted at the Kenya School of Government.

In his remarks, Prof. Nura Mohamed, KSG Director General said, "KSG is very delighted to be a part of this wonderful partnership. Today is a special day, one that we have eagerly been waiting for, to see the realization of the Centre that will take public servants to the next level of service delivery through advancement in the digital space. We will be a benchmark for other Centers of excellence in Africa," he affirmed.

According to Prof. Mohamed, AI Skilling will lead to a Public Service that is well suited for national transformation. A public servant in this case must be one that is fully accustomed to the now proven advanced digital space - that calls for a complete shift in the mindsets of those public servants who still want to hold onto old and inefficient practices of service delivery.

“Let us embrace the potential of AI with a commitment to continuous learning, ethical considerations, and a shared vision of a better, more efficient future for all,” he concluded.

The partners also celebrated the graduates of the first cohort that took part in Leading Digital Transformation in the Public Sector, awarding with them with certificates of completion in the program.

The Centre was officially opened by Ms. Ahunna Eziakonwa and Prof. Nura Mohamed flanked by officials from UNDP, Microsoft, KSG, Ministry of ICT and Digital Economy and the graduates.

Ms. Anna Nylander of the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) provided an insightful overview of the Centre's operations and objectives. She emphasized that the Centre is designed to address critical challenges faced by communities globally, focusing on sustainable development, innovation, and capacity building.

The Centre aims to improve digital competencies within the public sector; enhance access to advanced technologies and thus increase efficiency, inclusion, and service delivery within government; and promote a culture of innovation and experimentation embedded within the public sector.

Also present at the ceremony were Mr. Emmanuel Kata Kimeu, Secretary - Security and Audit Control - Ministry of ICT and Digital Economy, UNDP Resident Representative Anthony Ngororano, and AI National Skill Director Microsoft Ms. Winnie Karanu.

The impact of our food choices on health and wellbeing

*Elizabeth Kilelo
Research Assistant
Kenya School of Government*

Our daily food choices have a profound impact on our physical, mental, and emotional health. The nutrients and calories we consume provide the foundation for the body's functioning, influencing everything from energy levels and immune defense to mood regulation and cognitive function.

In the last edition, Ms. Elizabeth Kilelo focused on how your meals affect your physical health, mental and emotional well-being.

This week, in part two of the series, she delves into how food choices not only influence immediate energy levels and mood but also have long-term implications for the development of chronic diseases.

Long-Term Health and Disease Prevention:

Food choices not only affect immediate energy levels and mood but also have long-term implications for the development of chronic diseases.

Obesity and Metabolic Syndrome: A poor diet, high in refined sugars, unhealthy fats, and processed foods, is a major contributor to obesity and metabolic syndrome, a cluster of conditions that include high blood pressure, high blood sugar, excess abdominal fat, and abnormal cholesterol levels. These conditions increase the risk of type 2 diabetes, cardiovascular diseases, and stroke. In contrast, a diet rich in whole foods, including vegetables, fruits, lean proteins, and healthy fats, can help maintain a healthy weight and reduce the risk of chronic conditions.

Cardiovascular Health: Dietary choices significantly influence cardiovascular health. A diet high in saturated fats, Trans fats, and cholesterol can lead to the buildup of plaque in arteries, increasing the risk of heart disease and stroke. On the other hand, consuming foods rich in unsaturated fats, such as olive oil, nuts, and fatty fish, has been shown to lower cholesterol levels and reduce the risk of cardiovascular diseases. Furthermore, a diet high in fiber and antioxidants helps lower blood pressure and reduce inflammation, further supporting heart health.

Cancer Prevention: While no single food can prevent cancer, a healthy, balanced diet can reduce the risk of developing certain types of cancer. Foods high in antioxidants, such as fruits and vegetables, help protect cells from damage that may lead to cancer. Fiber-rich foods, particularly from plant-based sources, are also associated with a lower risk of colorectal cancer. Additionally, limiting the consumption of red and processed meats, which have been linked to increased cancer risk, can help reduce this risk.

In addition to the nutritional content of food, the way we eat plays a role in health and wellbeing. Paying full attention to the experience of eating has been linked to improved digestion, better emotional health, and a healthier relationship with food. Mindful eating encourages awareness of hunger cues, portion sizes, and food choices, helping individuals make healthier decisions and avoid overeating. The food we consume has a profound impact on every aspect of our health and wellbeing. From boosting physical vitality and supporting mental clarity to preventing chronic diseases, the right food choices are integral to living a long and healthy life. By making informed decisions about what we eat, embracing balanced nutrition, and practicing mindful eating, we can significantly improve our quality of life and reduce the risk of disease. A holistic approach to food one that incorporates both nutrition and the joy of eating can lead to a happier, healthier future.

"Good nutrition creates health in all areas of our existence. All parts are interconnected."

- T. Colin Campbell

Sitonik hangs up her boots

BY TABITHA KEMUNTO

The outgoing Deputy Director of Hospitality at the Kenya School of Government Ms. Esther Sitonik has been described as the mother of hospitality. Ms. Sitonik, who has dedicated 38 illustrious years of service, progressed through various roles from Housekeeping to Catering, ultimately reaching the pinnacle of her profession at the School.

She has witnessed the School's transformation and has served different Chief Executive Officers since she joined the School at the formative stage of her career.

In celebrating her career and dedication, the School management deemed it necessary to organize a farewell and thanksgiving ceremony on Wednesday, December 11, 2024.

Staff at the Hospitality Department, participate in the cake cutting ceremony to celebrate their outgoing boss KSG Director General Prof. Nura Mohamed affectionately referred to Ms. Sitonik as the "Mother of Hospitality." He described her as hardworking, resilient, and a source of hope.

"We celebrate you for the monumental achievements you have made. Your legacy lives on in the quality of services we see today. As you begin the next phase of your journey, we wish you well and will continue to draw on the mentorship you provided," he stated.

Prof. Mohamed took the time to highlight the unparalleled dedication of the departing officer to meet the unique needs of School clients through accommodation and conferencing services.

"Under your leadership, the hospitality department achieved remarkable milestones, including upgraded facilities, enhanced professionalism among staff, and a commitment to excellence that established KSG as a preferred training destination."

Prof. Mohamed also urged the current manager, Ms. Mugambi, and her team to uphold the standards set by Ms. Sitonik and raise the bar even higher. He encouraged staff to foster teamwork and mutual support, emphasizing that success is a collective effort.

Indeed, Ms. Sitonik's exemplary service has not gone without notice. She has received letters of commendation for successfully hosting high-level meetings and individuals, including Heads of State, Visiting High-Level Dignitaries, Cabinet Secretaries, Principal Secretaries, Chief Executive Officers of State Corporations and Members of the National Assembly.

Dr. Rachel Ngesa, Director of Learning and Development, at Lower Kabete emphasized celebrating one another even after exiting service. She quoted Psalms 92:14, saying, "They will still bear fruit in old age," and added that while her term of service has ended, her spirit and energy remain an inspiration to colleagues.

During the ceremony, Ms. Agnes Mugambi, the Principal Hospitality Officer, highlighted their shared journey and what she learnt from her former boss. She remarked, "From where you left, we have continued with various projects to strengthen our capacity to deliver high-quality service to our clients."

Head of Administration, Ms. Agnes Laikera, described Ms. Sitonik as a colleague, a friend and sister.

"During your tenure, you exhibited humility, grace, and kindness. Your ability to share success with your team and your deep love for KSG is what set you apart," she said.

WORLD AIDS DAY 2024 – NAIROBI COUNTRY CHAPTER

CHRP Annastacia M. Mwova, Senior HRM Officer at the Kenya School of Government after participating in the 10Km Half Marathon to commemorate World AIDS Day.

BY ANNASTACIA MWOVA

The Kenya School of Government (KSG) has been implementing initiatives to mainstream HIV and AIDS at the work place through the defined institutional frameworks.

The Government of Kenya declared the HIV and AIDS pandemic and a national disaster on November 25, 1999. The National Syndemic Diseases Control Council (NSDCC), formerly National AIDS Control Council (NACC) was formed and mandated to provide policy and strategic framework for mobilizing and coordinating resources towards prevention and control of transmission of HIV and provision of care and support to infected and affected persons in Kenya.

In this regard, the School has a critical role to play in supporting the Kenya Government efforts in addressing the HIV and AIDS pandemic and mitigating its impacts.

Every year on the 1st of December, the international community unites to observe World AIDS Day. This year, the School was represented by Ms. Anastasia Mwova after invitation from NSDC to participate in the Nairobi Country Chapter.

Kenya commemorated 40 years since the first reported HIV case with a vibrant and impactful World AIDS Day 2024 celebration at the Nyayo National Stadium. The event was presided over by the Cabinet Secretary for Health, Dr. Deborah Barasa, reflecting on the nation's progress in combating HIV and issuing a renewed call to address challenges hindering the achievement of ending AIDS by 2030.

A key highlight of the event was the launch of the 10-year HIV Progress Report which underscored Kenya's significant milestones. The report revealed that an estimated 1.378 Million Kenyans are living with HIV, with 97% receiving treatment through a robust network of 3,752 treatment sites. Dr. Barasa lauded these achievements, noting that Kenya is on track to meet the UNAIDS 95-95-95 targets by 2025, aiming for 95% of people living with HIV to know their status, 95% of those diagnosed to access treatment, and 95% of those on treatment to achieve viral suppression.

She highlighted persistent gaps, particularly in reducing new infections among children and youth and integrating HIV care with other health services. "We have made great strides; we cannot afford to be complacent. Persistent inequalities must be addressed to sustain our progress," she emphasized.

Acknowledging the critical role of international partners such as PEPFAR, the Global Fund, and UNAIDS in supporting Kenya's journey towards an AIDS-free future the CS remarked, "Their contributions have been instrumental, but sustained collaboration at both global and local levels is essential to achieve

our shared vision.”

Principal Secretary for Medical Services, Mr. Harry K. Kimtai, reinforced this year’s theme, “Promoting the Health and Well - Being of Men and Boys.” While celebrating Kenya’s success in controlling the epidemic, he noted that the 16,752 new HIV infections recorded in 2023, 39% being adolescents aged 15-24, illustrating the vulnerabilities faced by young people. “This underscores the triple threat of new HIV infections, unintended pregnancies, and gender-based violence,” he said.

Mr. Kimtai stressed the importance of targeted strategies for men and boys, who, despite representing only 35% of people living with HIV in Kenya, account for nearly half of AIDS-related deaths. “Their health and well - being are critical to achieving our national and global HIV goals,” he asserted.

National Syndemic Diseases Control Council (NSDCC) Chairman, Geoffrey Gitu, stressed the marathon’s symbolic importance. “This event sends a powerful message of unity and determination to achieve an AIDS -free Kenya by 2030,” he said highlighting the need to engage men and boys in addressing broader health challenges, including substance abuse, unintended pregnancies, and gender-based violence.

Dr. Ruth Laibon-Masha, CEO of the NSDCC, presented sobering statistics, revealing Kenya’s national HIV prevalence rate of 3.3% rises to 18.7% among people who inject drugs. Despite progress, 2023 saw 20,478 AIDS-related deaths, including 2,607 children aged 0-14. Dr. Masha called for targeted interventions and addressing inequities to sustain momentum in the fight against HIV.

The 2024 World AIDS Day celebration served as a powerful reflection of Kenya’s achievements over the past four decades while issuing a rallying call for sustained action. Dr. Barasa stated the importance of unity, innovation, and human rights in achieving Kenya’s goal of ending AIDS as a public health threat by 2030. “Ending AIDS is not just achievable; it is cost-effective. The actions we take now will determine whether we overcome this challenge or face greater hurdles in the future,” she said.

Blending reflection, celebration, and a forward-looking call to action, this year’s commemoration reaffirmed Kenya’s unwavering commitment to an AIDS-free future. Through innovative strategies, inclusivity, and collective determination, Kenya is poised to realize this vision by 2030.

The event also featured the World AIDS Day Half Marathon, dubbed “It’s a Race Against Time.” The marathon advocated for ending AIDS as a public health threat by 2030.

Having participated in the 10 kilometer half marathon, Ms. Mwova takes this opportunity to thank the School Management, for the nomination to attend this eye opening event which will go a long way in implementing the HIV & AIDS mainstreaming initiatives in the School.

Kenya's Foreign Policy at a Crossroads

Dr. Joseph Muita Ndung'u, Deputy Director Research, Consultancy and Advisory Services at the Kenya School of Government.

BY DR. J. MUITA NDUNG'U

Kenya's revised foreign policy demonstrates a commendable ambition to adapt to the evolving global landscape. The draft, which broadens the scope to eight diplomatic pillars, seeks to align the country's international engagements with domestic priorities under the Bottom-Up Economic Transformation Agenda (BETA). However, this initiative is undermined by a critical flaw: the conflation of diplomacy with the broader discipline of international relations. This oversight risks reducing the intricate dynamics of foreign policy to a series of short-term, transactional engagements, ultimately undermining the depth and sustainability of Kenya's global strategies.

Kenya has historically struggled with foreign policy coherence and adaptability, relying on an overly narrow lens to navigate complex international challenges. In peace and security, while active, Kenya's role in regional processes often emphasizes tactical negotiations at the expense of addressing deeper, systemic issues. Persistent challenges such as weak state institutions and geopolitical pressures remain unaddressed, limiting the sustainability of peace initiatives. Similarly, diaspora diplomacy, while laudably focused on the economic contributions of Kenyans abroad, has failed to incorporate broader strategies that engage with global migration trends, advocate for labor rights, or enhance the political inclusion of diaspora communities in both domestic and international governance frameworks. Climate diplomacy provides another illustrative example. Kenya has positioned itself as a leader in environmental advocacy. Yet, its efforts have frequently fallen short in leveraging international institutions such as the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP) to tackle critical global issues like climate finance inequities and adaptation mechanisms. By prioritizing short-term diplomatic successes over strategic, system-wide approaches, Kenya risks perpetuating the shortcomings that have historically hindered its foreign policy ambitions.

This conflation of diplomacy and international relations presents significant risks. For instance, in global governance, focusing solely on diplomatic engagements without addressing the structural inequities embedded in international institutions undermines Kenya's aspirations for a more equitable global order. Similarly, in the realm of security, prioritizing peace diplomacy over the material strengthening of systemic power leaves Kenya vulnerable to persistent regional instability. Economic diplomacy, while laudably focused on trade agreements and partnerships, often neglects the broader international relations dynamics that shape global markets, such as geopolitical tensions, supply chain disruptions, and the rapid evolution of digital economies.

To build a coherent and effective foreign policy, Kenya must explicitly distinguish between diplomacy and international relations while creating a framework that integrates the two seamlessly. First, the country needs to adopt a robust international relations framework to inform and guide its diplomatic priorities. For example, Kenya's push for regional integration through the African Continental Free Trade Area (AfCFTA) must be informed by a nuanced understanding of global trade dynamics, digital innovation, and the principles of equitable economic development.

Equally essential is capacity-building within Kenya's diplomatic corps. Diplomats must receive comprehensive training in international relations theories and practices, equipping them to navigate the complexities of foreign affairs and balance tactical negotiations with broader strategic considerations.

Multi-stakeholder engagement should also become a central feature of Kenya's foreign policy, incorporating the perspectives and resources of civil society, international organizations, and private sector actors to enrich its global strategies. Policy coherence must be prioritized to ensure that pillars such as climate diplomacy and science, technology, and innovation diplomacy are grounded in robust international relations strategies. Leveraging Kenya's academic and policy institutions to strengthen research and analysis capacities can provide the evidence-based insights needed to anticipate and address emerging global trends. Additionally, Kenya's geopolitical position offers significant opportunities to champion structural reforms within regional organizations like the East African Community (EAC) and the African Union (AU), cementing its leadership in regional and continental affairs.

Public awareness is another critical component. Educating citizens about the distinctions between diplomacy and international relations can foster a more informed national dialogue on Kenya's global role and build broader support for a more sophisticated and strategic foreign policy.

Kenya's revised foreign policy represents a step forward in adapting to global changes and aligning international engagement with domestic priorities. However, its current approach risks addressing symptoms rather than systemic causes. By clearly distinguishing between diplomacy and international relations, integrating strategic frameworks, and fostering multi-stakeholder collaboration, Kenya can build a foreign policy that meets immediate objectives while positioning itself as a leader in the global arena. This nuanced approach will enable Kenya not only to respond to the challenges of the present but also to establish a foundation for enduring leadership in an increasingly interconnected world.
